

The Customer Funnel

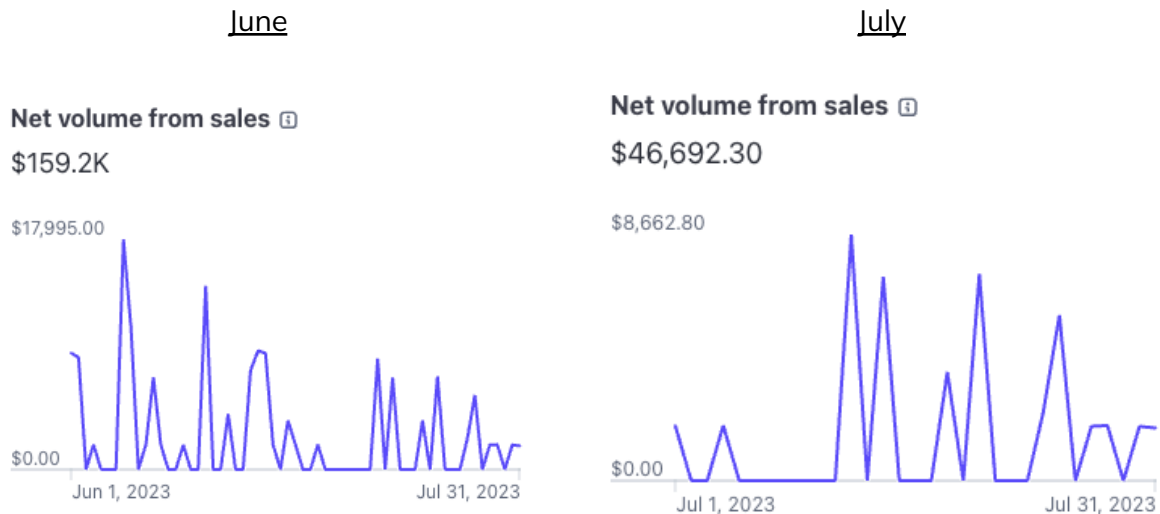

Note: This used to be called The Workshop Funnel.

The traditional funnel:

1. Get leads.
2. Turn leads into clients.

When I did it this way, I experienced some results. But I had massive volatility.

- 200,000+ follower audience with a few clients a month.
- Back and forth months like these:

The traditional funnel asks a lot from people:

Leads → Clients

It's scary for people who have never paid you to pay $1k+. Yet the industry sees it as the best practice.

Out of 500 people they DM, 1 person ends up becoming a client. Which is a low conversion rate for warm traffic. But it's "ok" for many because that 1 yes means $1k-$2k/month. It's inefficient. It's just that the big amount per client masks the inefficiency.

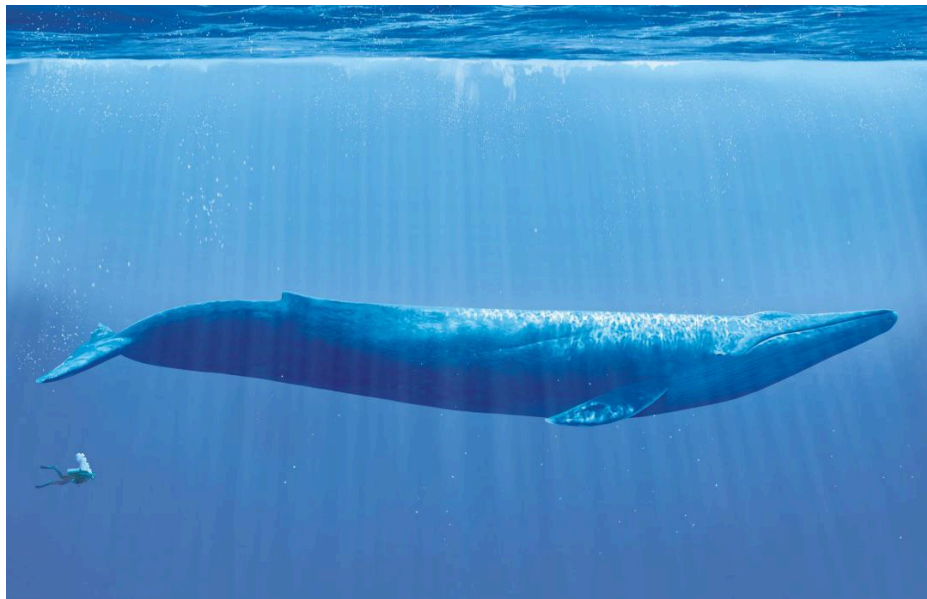

Lots of folks could go from “ok” to “great” by adding one step in between:

Leads → Customers → Clients

Creating customers (one-time buyers) is helpful because it allows you to create Prospect Inertia.

The more money someone gives you, the more money they’re likely to give you.

By asking them to give you a small amount first, say $100, you make them more likely to buy your next thing than if you didn’t. I ran the numbers: 56 times more likely.

Most people don’t have a lead problem. They have a lead conversion problem because they lack that middle step in between their free stuff and their more expensive stuff.

In 365 days I netted an extra 543 leads. That’s less than 2 a day. But with proper lead conversion, that was enough to scale to $100k/month.

Understanding lead conversion made me base my funnel off 2 questions:

1. How can I create a customer?
2. How can I only talk to customers?

(Workshops are not the only ways to create customers.)

Unless you have a big audience, the Customer Funnel probably won't make you more money than your clients.

Its true value is in finding and accelerating people who are likely to become clients.

We'll do this with 4 actions:

1. Creating Your Customer Offer
2. Selling It
3. Delivering It
4. Upselling Customers

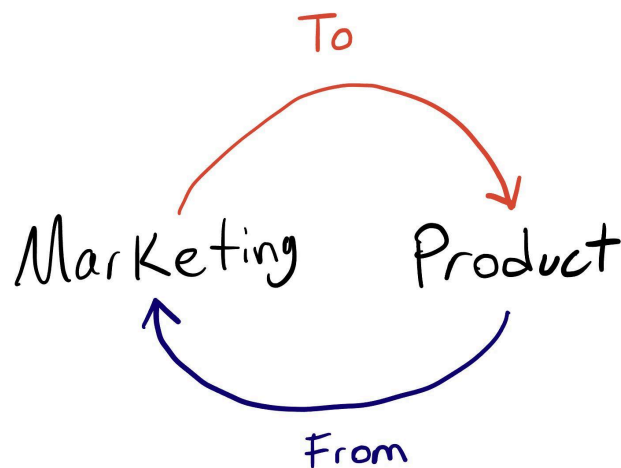

Creating Your Customer Offer

To get the end result it serves you to look backwards from it:

There's a paradox where marketing is more persuasive when we market from a product rather than to a product.

If you make stuff for leads first, you get less leads.

But if you make it for clients first, you get more leads.

Notice how each feels:

To Product	From Product
"This Google Doc Template will sell your offer to 100 people for $2,000/month without a sales call. You can get it here:"	"This Google Doc Template sold 100 clients at $2,000/month without a sales call. You can get the exact copy here:"

An offer is more persuasive when you have skin in the game. It's safer for them because you're taking the risk. Which makes it more attractive.

You don't really need to think much of what your Customer Offer should be. Find something that you already have skin in the game in (like something you used already) or that you will have soon (like something you'll create for clients).

This forces you to sell something good. I unconsciously put more effort into things that are for the Cash Creators than for others. This pressure is healthy because product-first businesses tend to have better retention and growth.

People can feel when something comes from a product vs. to a product.

Extraction

Think about useful "stuff" that you already have:

- What assets do I use a lot? → Sawdust Templates // Google Doc 314 // Prompts
- What assets have sold well in the past? → Flash Sales
- What already got good feedback from clients? → Whale Bait Feedback.
- What do clients need? → This Material.
- What are they asking from me that I'm not giving them? → 1000 New Whales
- What am I already delivering? → The 2025 Planner
- What can I bundle? → Summer 10k Bundle
- What can I unbundle? → The 100k Map
- What unique mechanism do you have that can deliver a result? → The Protagonist Post.
- What is missing from your delivery? → Validation Equation
- Did you say it? → The 20 Minute Email

Checkpoint: Find the "stuff".

Packaging

“Stuff” alone is valuable. Packaging it makes it sell-able. I do this with a Tool and a Promise.

A Tool is the proprietary name.

Name the “stuff” like you would name a tool in a toolbox.

(This is why I capitalize my Tools. I want people to use my stuff like an everyday term. It creates more intrigue this way.)

- Templates → The $2k Google Doc Offer Templates
- Swipe Files → 365 Days Of Emails
- Mechanism → The Customer Funnel
- Assets → The Sawdust Templates
- Ease → One-Page 2025 Plan
- Script → The Cash Script
- Expected Result → Thinner Every Meal Cookbook
- Bundles → The Summer $10k
- Collections → The $100k/Month SOPs
- Easy Installs → The Calendly Kit
- Ideas → The Monopolistic Positioning
- Prompts → The “Insightizer”
- A Fascinating Fact → The 610 Script

The Promise is what it does or what they will get.

Make sure this passes The Meaning Test:

You pass The Meaning Test if you show your promise to two people and it means the same thing to both.

Fails	Passes
Transform your physique.	See your six pack.
Create your Personal Monopoly.	Make $10,000.
Become a master of productivity.	Finish your workday by noon.

A story:

Coaching vs. Consulting vs. Mentorship

The promise could take either of these angles. Some people find one easier than others.

- Coaching (Helping your clients find the answer within them)
- Consulting (Giving them the answer)
- Mentorship (Demonstrating how you got the answer)

Tool: You use a checklist when onboarding clients.

People like buying customer offers in one of two extremes:

Either a new app for their phone that's easy to install or a completely different phone brand. What they don't like is upgrading in between phones.

Checkpoint: You have a Customer Offer made up of a Tool and a Promise.

If you feel stuck, a good question to ask yourself: What thing worth $100 can I sell this week that I know will sell?

Selling Your Customer Offer

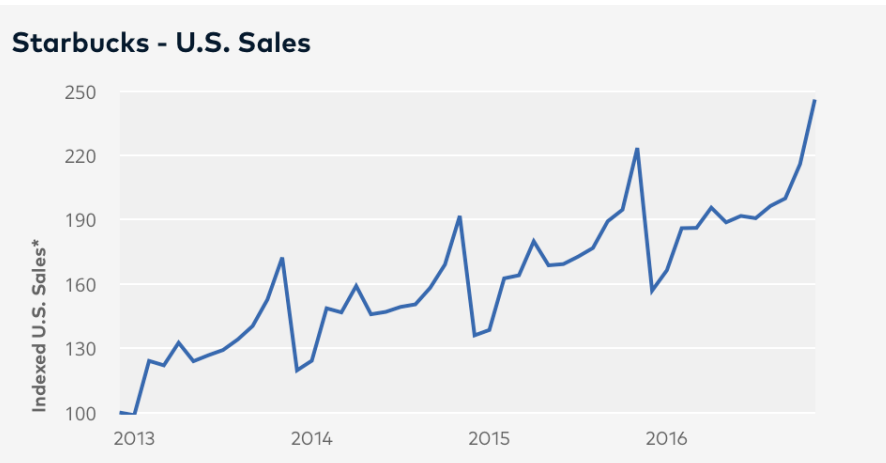

Three Principles:

1. The KPI is offers made.

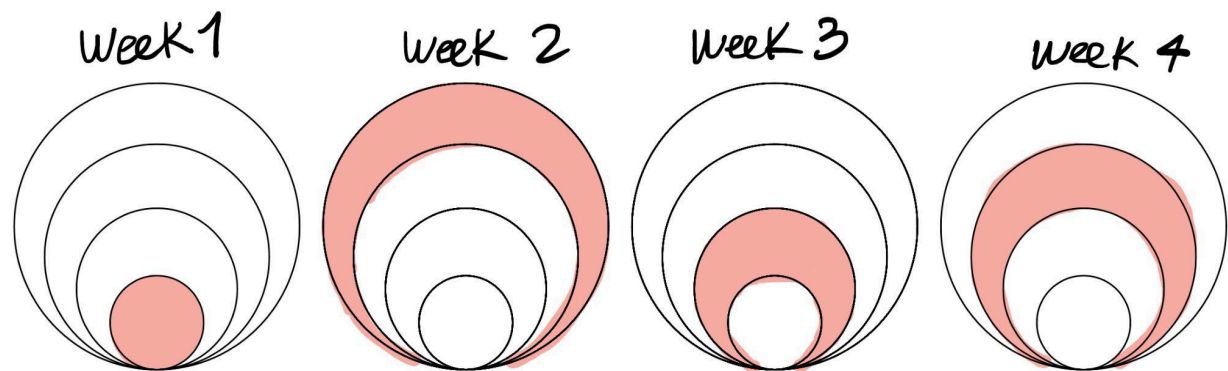

I send 1 email a day. Sometimes 3. People keep buying. A few people even thanked me. Buying feels good. And people like buying more than I like selling. Might as well sell more.

2. Limited offers sell more than unlimited offers.

This is why I put effort into cycling offers:

I want to send a message that “things go away here”. This conditions the audience to respond faster, as opposed to the normal route of being always available.

3. Include A Higher Access Option

10% of people are willing to pay 10 times as much. (23% of Cohort buyers bought the Pass).

By adding a Higher Access Option, like a Pass, you get two benefits:

- a) You get paid more.
- b) You identify who's there for your stuff and who's there for your stuff and you.

Passes converted into clients at 25%. If I had used them earlier, I would've got to $100k/month in 75% of the time.

Armed with your Customer Offer and Higher Access Option like a Pass, it's time to sell it. 5 good ways:

1. Email / Groups
2. Social Offers
3. DMs
4. Joint Ventures
5. Ads

Email / Groups

Every follow is an implicit request for information.

Every email sub / group request is an implicit request for help. Plus it's private so it's more natural to make frequent offers there.

To sell mine, 90% of the time I'll do

- Day 1: Customer Offer Template
- Day 2-6: Insight-Based Emails
- Day 7: Customer Offer Template Twice

Emails
• Invitation: 1000 New Whales
• How to revive a "dead" audience • $19,600 in 36 Hours. Here's how:
• Life Is Not Always Peaches And Cream • How Doing It Wrong Made Me $1 Million
• The Insight-Based Lead Magnet • Why selling works on email but not on social media
• Do free groups work? • Sell Ideas. Not Offers.
• The people who comment are not the people who buy.

- 3 ways to get Whales into your email list.
- Let Them Save Face.
- Why I paid someone \$233.000.
- Do this when your offer stops converting
- [\[Last Day\] 1000 New Whales](#)
- 10 Hours Left.

Some things you can expect:

1. Sales are often highest on the last day because people need consequences to act. Don't judge a campaign's effectiveness before it's over.

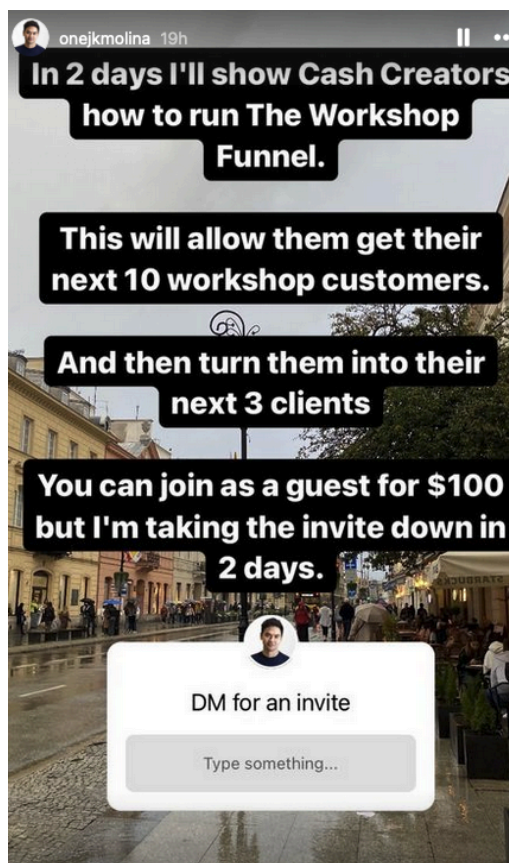

2. It took 3-4 cycles of taking things away to condition the audience.
3. Making more offers will rarely result in you making less money.

Email Offers couple nicely with Social Offers:

Social Offers

These are helpful whether you have or not have an email list. The rule of thumb is that it's generally better to ask for a reply or comment. Not a link as social media is not a good place for daily links.

Tweets / Stories:

If you don't have a list you can just copy-paste the email into stories back to back.

If you find it helpful, you can also hit people up on the last day:

*Hey name, this link expires tonight.
Are you in?*

DM Offers

If you don't have much reach or you just want more people then you might have to get resourceful with DMs.

DMs often work faster than email because they're 1-1.

Hey name - this week I'm hosting a workshop on XYZ.

I've made it easy to get for just $100. I thought it might benefit you.

Shall I send you the details?

+ Follow Up.

Message people who know might benefit from it already in your world:

- Previous Customers
- Maybe Later's
- Tire Kickers
- Previous Clients
- Your followers
- People who ask you
- Group chats
- Local networks

Joint Ventures

Find someone who you don't directly compete with and give them something they benefit from.

These would be free for their community. But it's still a paid environment. People who pay for one thing are more willing to pay for another thing.

JK Molina

Hey man. Is it possible to pay for a 1 hour Q&A of you in my community?

✓ 10:58 AM

If you'd like me to do one for your community too I'm glad to do so as well.

Dan Koe

Yeah lets do that, they'd like it a lot

Checkpoints:

- You've created your Customer Offer.
- You've promoted it.
- You've taken it down.

Delivering Your Customer Offer

When I create for clients, I help both customers and clients.

When I create for customers I help none.

As I create this, I've even mentioned stuff that customers don't have access to.

If you think about customers you might enter "selling" mode. This is how you mess it up.

This is not a webinar or a lead magnet. This is a Tool for your clients.

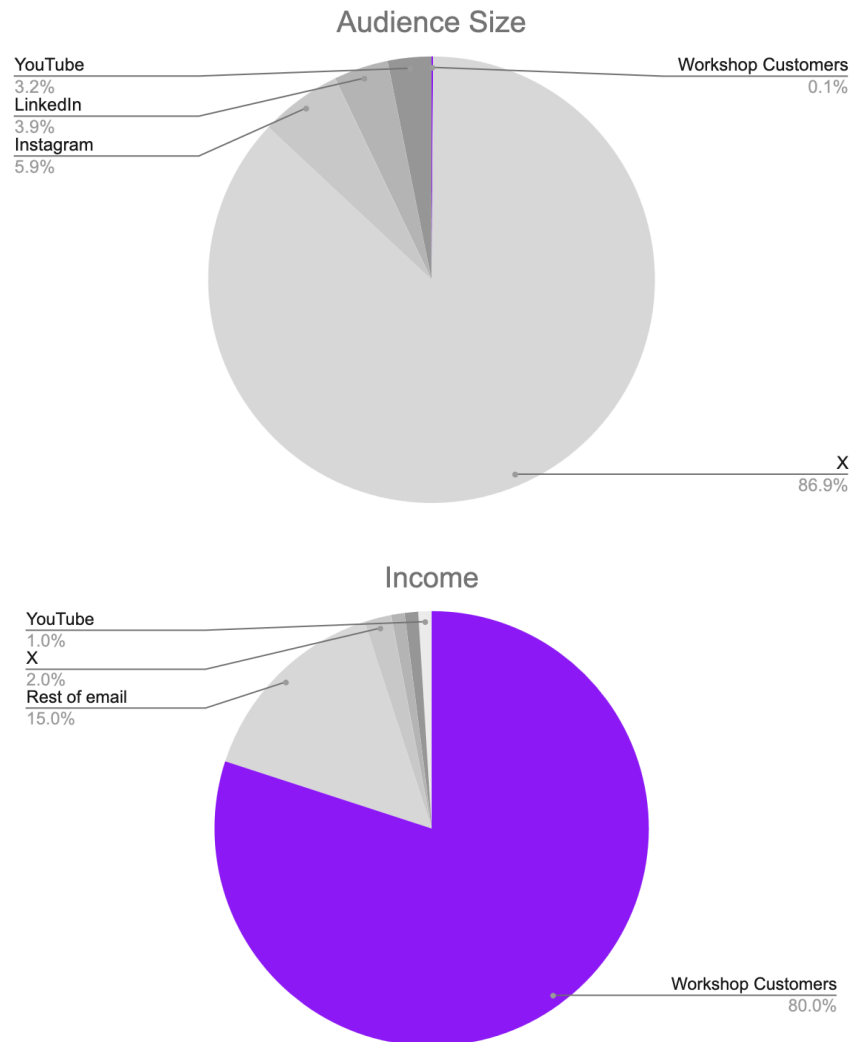

By creating for clients you both serve them better and create curiosity for your Core Offer.

It's in everybody's best interest for you to deliver effective work. The format doesn't matter. I just do it live because I like it. What matters is does the thing work?

Volume ain't value.

An effective Customer Offer is often much, much less than we think. There's often one key insight that it needs to be about. By adding more than that you're actually making it less valuable.

Upselling Customers Into Clients

The more offers you make the more offers you are allowed to make.

Because John asked Sarah out it's natural for him to ask her if she'd like to have a drink after. It's the natural next step because Sarah is already in motion.

Because I offered this Customer Offer it's natural for me to ask customers if they'd like to move to the next stage. It would also be a waste not to do so because often 10% of people want to pay you 10 times more.

Touchpoints:

Open a higher tier offer from your Offer Shell to your Customers.

Make sure to have a cap and a deadline. Typically I run 3-7 days.

If your Core Offer is closed, you open it just for them as long as you use the right wording:

Instead of saying "Program is closed", say "This invite is expired".

So you have the option to open only for customers and stay ethical.

Inside the Customer Offer	• If you're doing it live: Send doc in chat. • Mention it in the beginning and end of yours (if it's pre-recorded).

To Pass Buyers:

When Joining	Welcome. What's your focus so I can point you in the right direction?
1 Week In	How's it tracking? Do you know your next 3 steps?

1 Week Out	Something that might help you keep your momentum going: You have the option to credit the payment you've made (and cancel the next $500 one in 6 days) to Cash Creators. So you essentially save $1000 and your rate goes down to $X/week and the next step would be to get a 1-on-1 with me to craft your plan. Let me know if you'd like to take me up on this and I'll get you my link.
-------------------	---

From 1 offer we created 9 offers.

The more offers you make the more offers you're allowed to make.

And you can add 1 more if you'd like: Implementation Session.

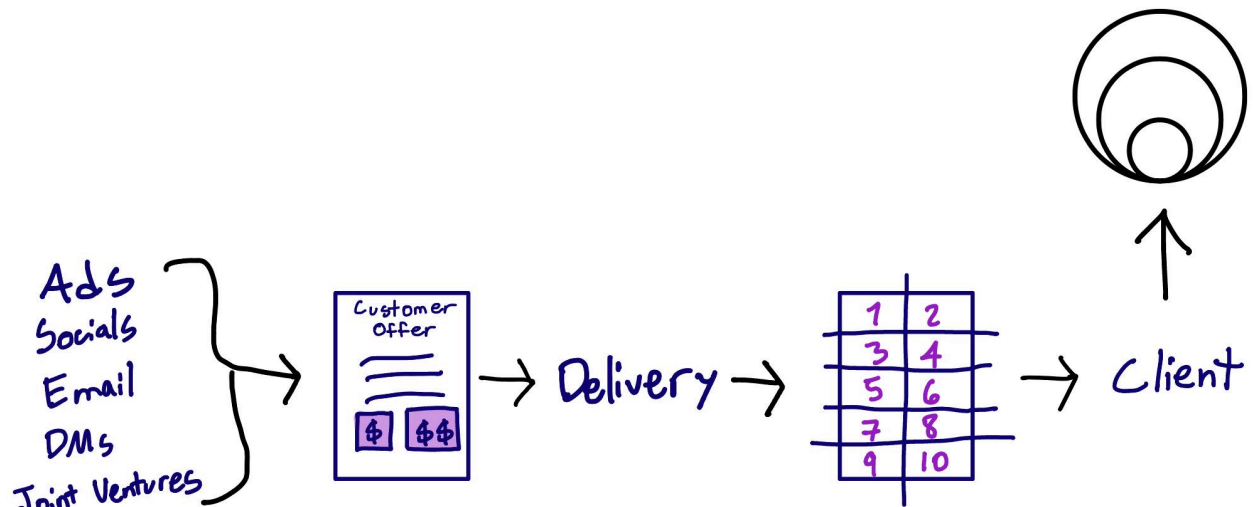

Offer customers to hop on a Group Zoom and ask you anything. I frame this as "Let's implement what you bought."

It serves as a value add and you're spending time with buyers. Which is not the worst use of your time.

It gets you 3 more upselling touchpoints: You can sell live, with the recording and with a short email sequence after that.

(Every time I do an Implementation Session I get a new client).

Upselling Customers isn't hard. You're 56 times more likely to do so. Just make the main things the main things:

1. Make offers.
2. Package them well.
3. Offer a Higher Access Option.
4. Deliver good work.
5. And don't forget the Touchpoints.

By deploying the Customer Funnel you're already making the business more efficient:

Instead of creating to get paid, you're getting paid to create. Customers are financing your Client delivery. Which allows you to focus on what I consider the most fun part of this job:

Creating cool stuff.

This brings me immense joy and I hope it brings you that too.
