

Servant

Story about the old lady.

I made my phone my master. She made hers her servant.

When I implied “look my phone is so much better than you” she had all the right to tell me “yeah but at least it doesn’t control me.”

People who make far more than me can tell me how much more they make. I can tell them “Yeah. I also don’t have to record talking head videos or do sales calls.”

My business is my servant, not my master. And that’s kind of the whole point. The business doesn’t exist to serve the customer at the expense of the owner. It exists to serve the customer AND the owner.

When you see your business as your servant, not your master, you get much better at it. Both objectively and emotionally.

While others identify with their successes or failures, you just look at what needs to be fixed and then you fix it. Just like you don’t identify with a loose screw and just use grab a screwdriver,

Looking at your highs and lows in your business as problems to be fixed, not as a reflection of your identity, allows you to just choose what needs to be done and do it.

People who get really high when they get a client also get pretty low when they lose one. It’s much more useful to just flatten both by not identifying with them and seeing as the thing they are: Part of the job.

Today I’ll give you the Tools to do the job. We define a job as a business that’s your servant and makes you $1 million per year.

And define the Tools as the offers you can use to get there. Use the ones that serve you and put them down when they don’t.

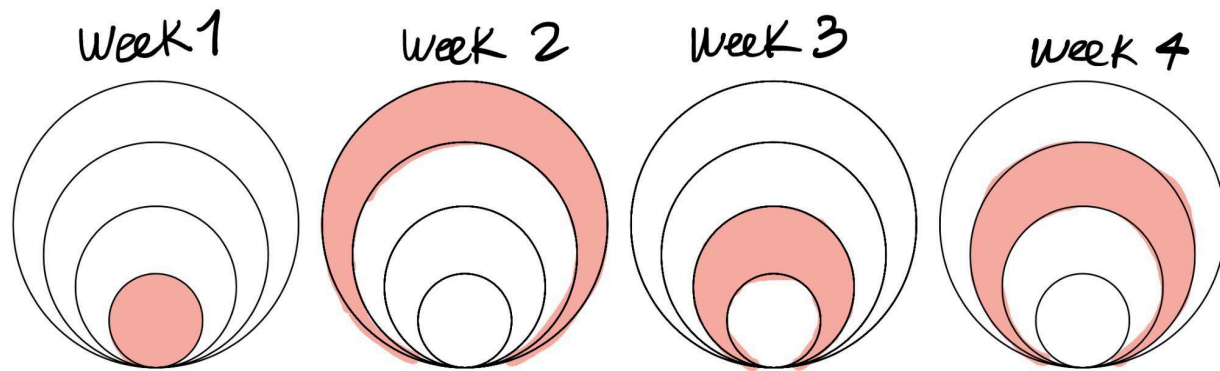

The Offer Toolbox

In an ideal world one offer is enough. Just “do more volume” and things will work out.

In the real world, Offer Fatigue is a thing: If people know what you’re going to say they stop listening.

I put a lot of thought into cycling offers. This is why my offer went through 314 edits and I've done multiple workshops. I don't want people to know what's going to come next because the moment they got you figured out, they got you.

Fortunately, this can be as easy as just cycling through levels of our Shell.

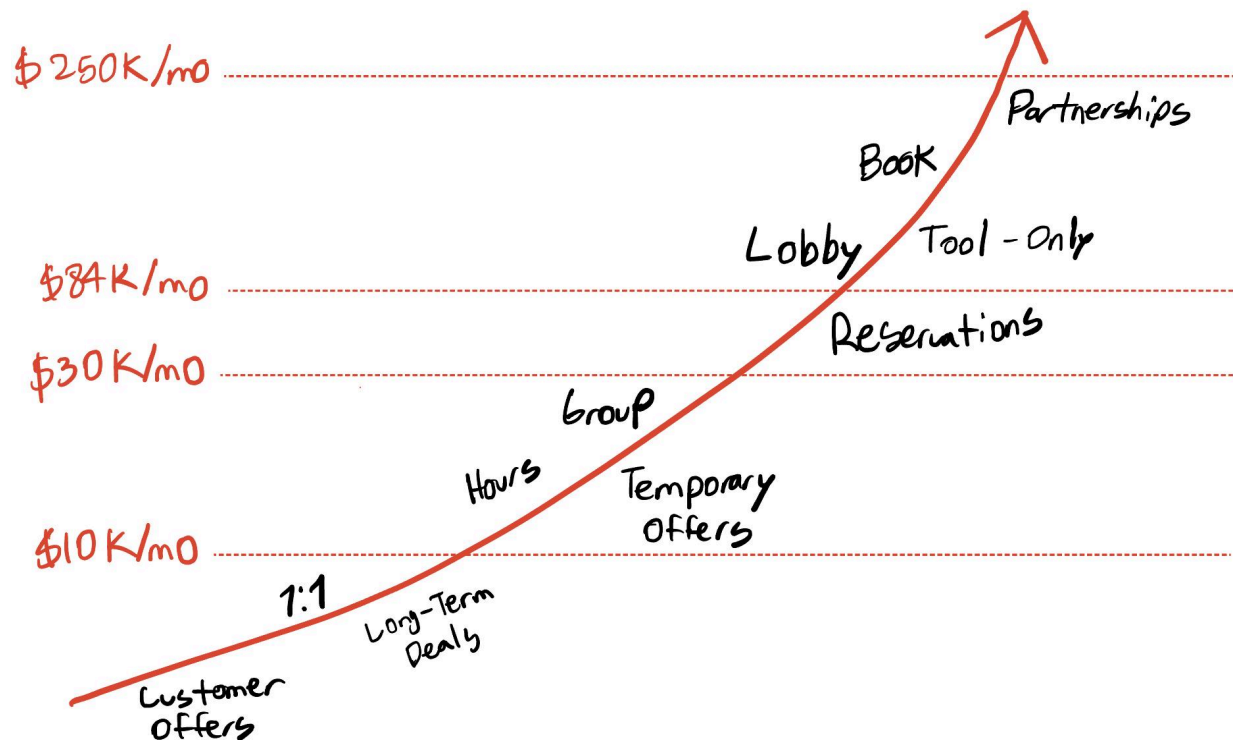

Another benefit of cycling is that some offers do some things better than others:

Logic says if you want more clients then always be open. But I got more clients these past few months when I sold a Pass and then upsold people into clients than by just asking people to become clients. The less intuitive offer won.

Different offers create different outcomes in your business that you may want more than what you think you want.

TL;DR Many good offers > one excellent offer. In money, overall enjoyment and discoveries that one rigid offer doesn't give you.

Not all offers take you to $1 Million. That's optimal because then you can say no to the offers that don't serve you at your stage:

Explained:

MRR	Tool	What It Is	What It Does
$250k+	Partnerships	10% of profits in exchange for consulting.	Allows you to play long term games with long term people.
	Book	Book Funnel.	Introduces people to your Ideas. Which makes the whole thing easier.
	Tool-Only	Only Past + Future Workshops. No access to you (maybe 1 team member).	Monetizes fish. Reduces churn. But rarely serves as an upsell.
	Lobby	Your main tools for the price of 1 weekly payment. Can get credited to the Group payment.	Finds people with the potential to become great clients but not the conviction / cash yet.
$84k	Reservations	Make a reservation for when you open with 1 weekly payment as a deposit.	Secures MRR for later. Serves as a buffer. Finds the truth.
$30k	Group	1-on-1 Onboarding + Group Calls + Portal + Community	Grows MRR the best with limited prices for limited access. Typically your bread and butter offer.

	Temporary	Passes, Cohorts, Shortened versions of your program.	Finds Whales among Fish That Buy. It's a great resource to find who wants your "stuff" and who wants you.
	Hours	Zoom with you.	Monetizes people who may not be willing to commit to a program - but are still willing to pay.
$10k	Long-Term Deals	Longer Term Commitments in exchange for lower prices, more access or credit.	Churn and volatility reduction. Also far more enjoyment.
	1:1 Clients	The most you're willing to give to your clients.	More depth typically leads to better results. If you haven't worked with clients much, or are just starting, this is the fastest way.
	Customer Offers	Bundles, Recordings, Workshops, Assets.	Finds leads 56.2x more likely to buy. If you have a big audience: it also serves as a revenue source.

If I were to say which traits were the most useful on each I'd say

- 0-$10k/month: Dumb action. Following the Cash Script and 1000 New Whales until you get there.
- $10k-$30k/month: Implementing your Offer Shell.
- $30k-$84k/month: Repetition of fundamentals.
- $84k-$100k/month: Guarding your judgement and emotions.

The Minimalist Planner

It's useful to think of plans as something with two parts: there's the plan and there's the tactics.

The plan is the big goal. Tactics are what gets you there.

Life has too many variables to be rigid with tactics. Everything works and then it doesn't. The sooner you accept this the less pain you go through.

The best course of action is to use both: To stick to the plan but to change the tactics.

What this looks like:

1. Find out if I'm ahead or behind: 📅 2025 Plan \(Make A Copy\) .
2. Set a plan for the next month.
3. Repeat.

You can't predict the future but you can create it by focusing on one good next step. Reducing the timeframe over which you plan reduces the pressure and anxiety of planning.

This is why I rarely decide on tactics more than a month in advance:

Month:	Frontend Offer	Backend Offer

Rules of thumb:

- Have a frontend and a backend offer.
- Have a reason to act now like scarcity or urgency.

📅 My 2024 Planner .

Recap

- You're the master and your business is your servant.
- If they know what you're going to say they stop listening. Cycle your offers.
- Don't change the plan. Tweak the tactics.

Over the year I'll give you the offers I'll make in advance to navigate the Seasons. Spring and Summer lend themselves better to certain tactics. Fall others and Winter others. We'll sort them out months in advance so you know what to do when they come.

For now, let's start with 1 good step. And plan out your next month.

1. Stick to the plan: 📄 2025 Plan \(Make A Copy\) .
2. Change the tactics:
