

The Offer Shell

Sales are easier the more we sell what people want.

And more than our stuff, people want us. Imagine if you dropped all boundaries today and sold unlimited access to you for a flat fee. Calls. DMs. Lunch Every Day. 5 spots only.

The key, then, is not finding a good offer. You already have a good offer. The key is finding how to sell it without crossing your personal boundaries.

The default offer structure today is an Offer Suite. Typically a combination of stuff like a Course, Mastermind, Program and a Community.

The implications of a Suite is that improvement in one offer won't bleed unto the others.

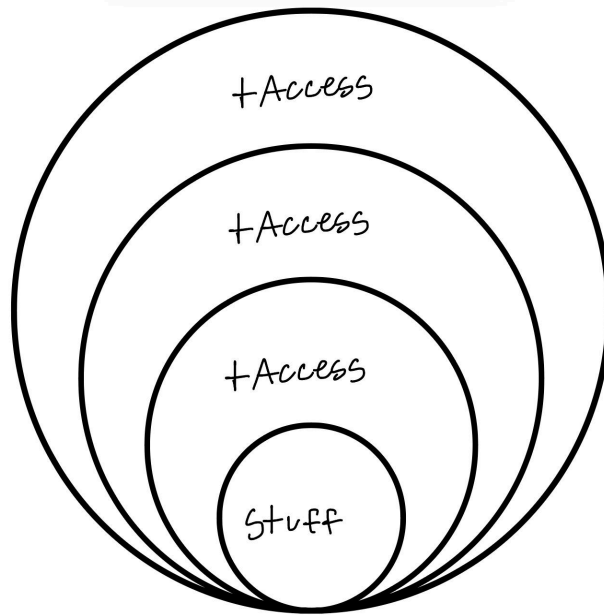

This demands that you divide your attention. Dividing your attention often leads to unhappiness because you can't be fully present in one thing.

I'm at my happiest when I'm creating one thing and get in flow. But flow and multitasking don't get along. It's one or the other. For me it's either flow with more happiness or multitasking with less happiness.

This tradeoff is what got me in search of a model in which improvements in one area bled more into the others. That way I wouldn't have to create many things to make more. I can just put all I got into 1 thing and know that everything will be fine.

Introducing, The Offer Shell: The Offer Structure that monetizes access, not stuff.

You can see it in action now. Some people paid $400 to be here. Some people pay $30,000/year to be here. Everyone is getting the same stuff. The difference is in how much access they can get on top of it.

I spent all day yesterday doing “low ROI” tasks like rehearsing this workshop and making sure the graphics were just right. But having a Shell makes them high ROI because the improvements will bleed into every level:

From one-time buyers today all the way to my highest paying clients.

Knowing that focusing on this doc is one of the highest ROI things I can do for my business right now allowed me to unlock flow. And thus resulted in quite an enjoyable (and profitable) week.

The Shell gives you 3 things a Suite doesn't:

1. It keeps you in flow for longer. So you're happier.
2. It sells the most desirable thing you have: access to you. So you get more buyers and upsells.
3. It rewards you financially for doing less and focusing on your art. (In my experience, a lot of coaches like the art aspect more than the business aspect. Instead of being coaches who happen to do art they'd much rather be artists who happen to coach. That's who the Shell benefits most.)

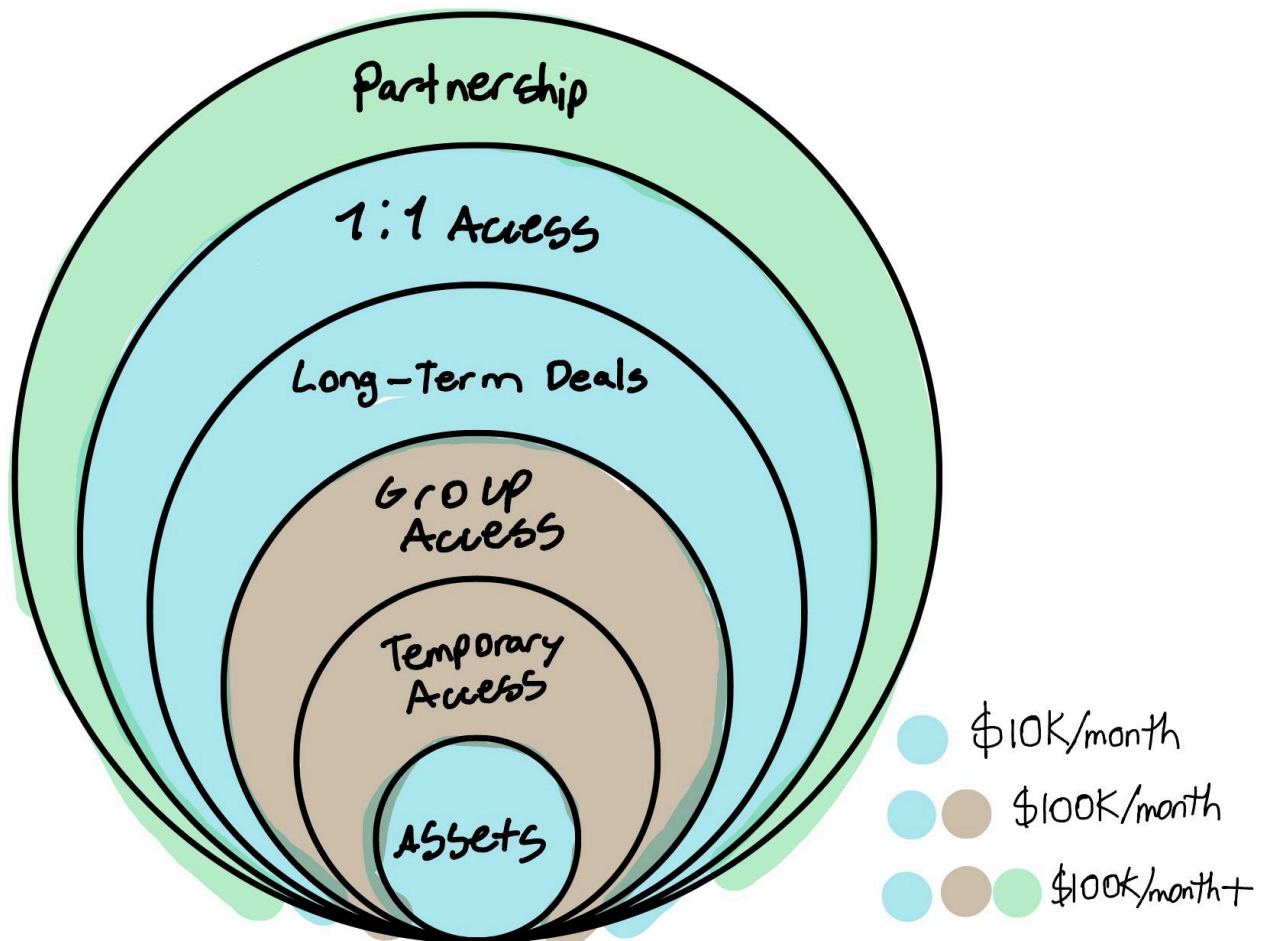

To install it we need 3 things:

- Tiers (What will you sell?)
- Front End (How do you get buyers for it?)
- Back End (How do you upsell people within it?)

Tiers

All offer templates are at the end of this document.

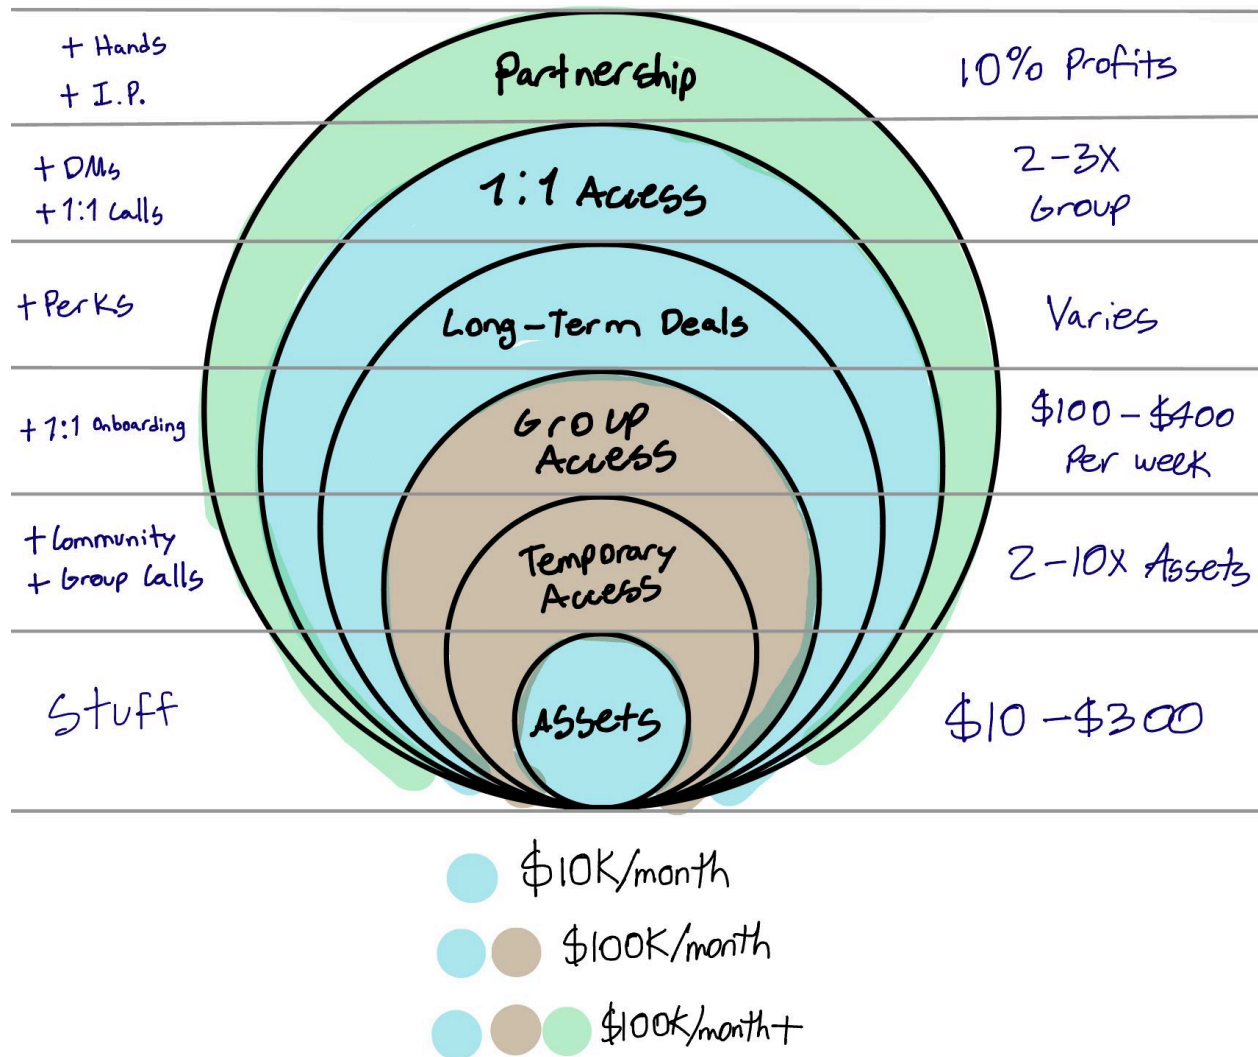

First identify the ones that serve you so you don't end up installing stuff that doesn't. When we finish you should have less work.

Delivery

Pricing

Front End

In theory, one offer is enough. Just “do more volume” and the offer will sell.

In the real world, Offer Fatigue is a thing: When people know what you’ll say they stop listening.

I put a lot of thought into cycling offers. My offer went through 314 edits and I’ve done multiple workshops. I don’t want people to know what’s next because if they figure you out, they got you.

Fixing this can be as easy as just cycling through levels of your Shell in the Front End:

Some rules of thumb for duration, as it's easy to overcomplicate:

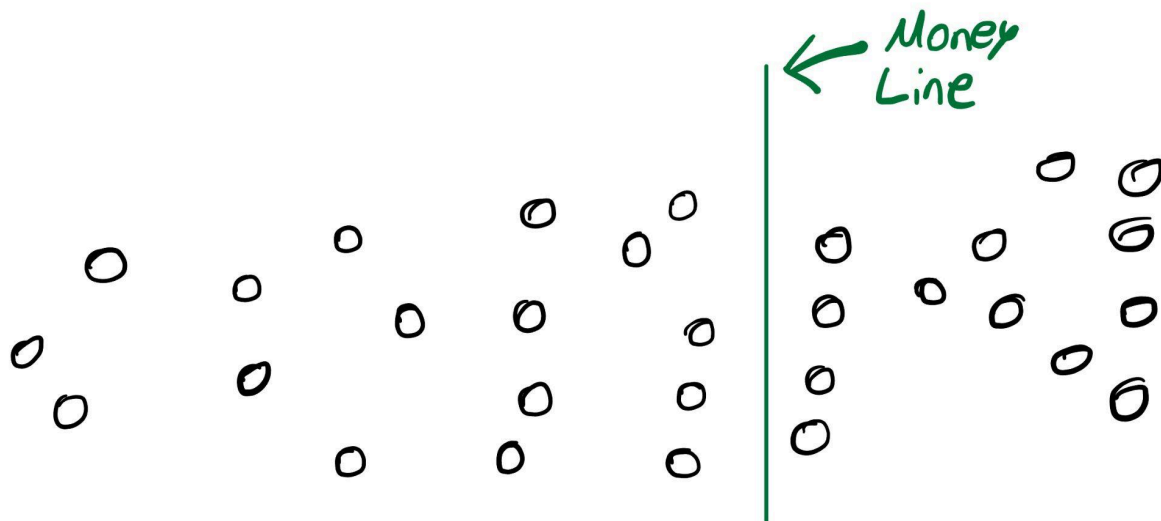

- There's no minimum.
- 90% of the time I cycle between a Client Offer and a Customer Offer. 1 week each.
- Maximum 3 weeks. I'll go over during special events like Black Friday.

It's easy to get too concerned with the cadence. But this is kind of a waste. It serves you more to build the cadence around your life. This will lead to interesting Protagonist-Style offers you haven't thought about before:

- Birthday Weekend Offer
- The Summer $10k
- OMAR

Back End

Another way the Shell reduces waste: moving people beyond The Money Line.

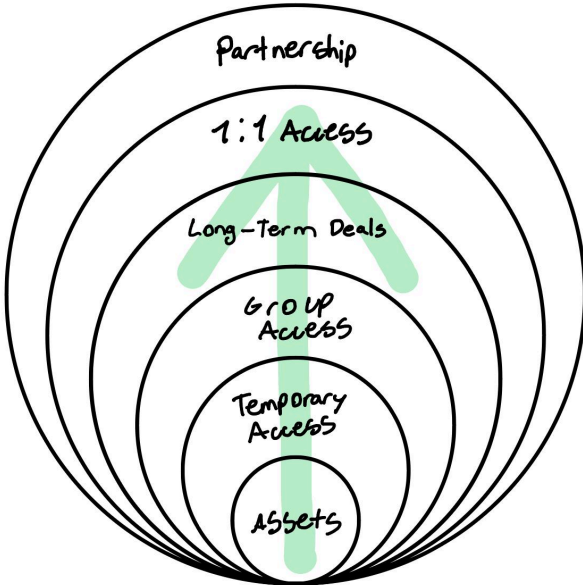

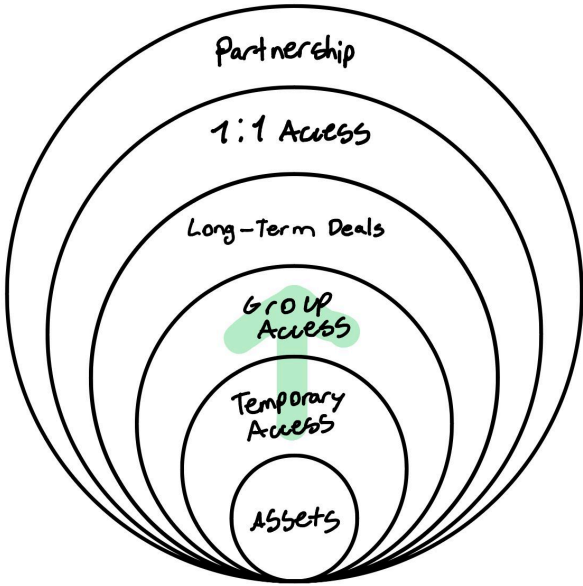

- 80% of my clients come from a workshop.
- 25% of people who bought a workshop became clients.
- 15% of clients buy something else.
- 5% of clients become 1:1 clients.

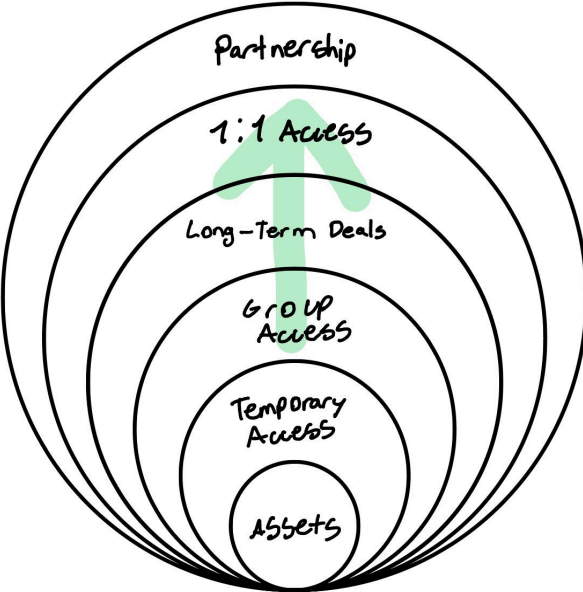

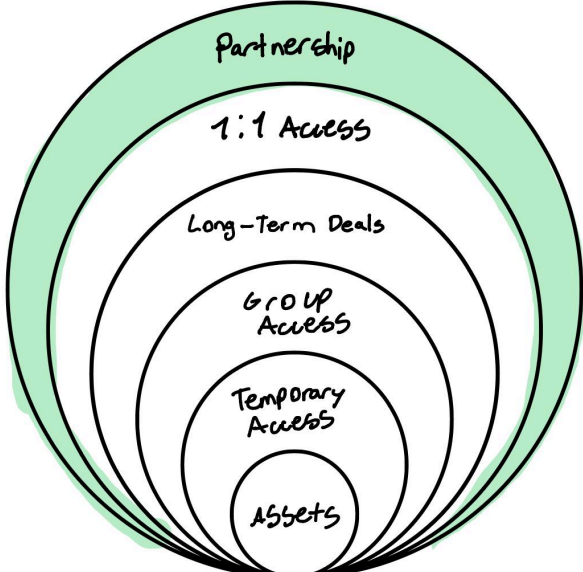

The further end of The Money Line is where most of my money comes from, and it's the people I sell to the least.

This is intentional as too much selling to your current clients damages the relationship and you both get less.

“Less-salesy” upselling methods work better in my experience. They’re not hard. But they do have a few moving pieces that require slowing down.

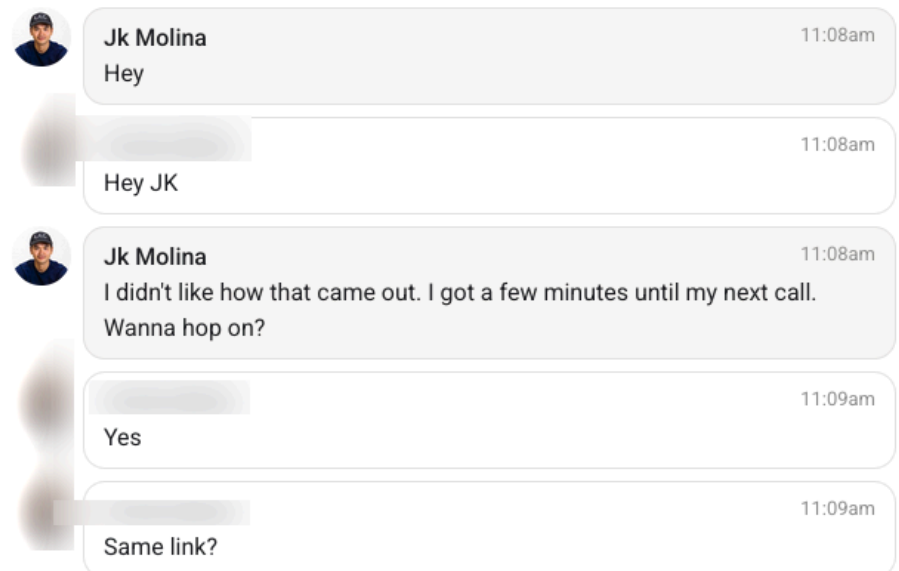

| Area | Tool |
|------|------|
|------|------|

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|   | Workshop/Asset Funnel (In Skool Classroom).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|  | Credit their last payment into the next commitment. Example: "Something that might help you keep your momentum going: You have the option to credit the payment you've made (and cancel the next $500 one in 6 days) to Cash Creators. So you essentially save $1000 and your rate goes down to $X/week and the next would be to get a 1-on-1 with me to craft your plan. Let me know if you'd like to take me up on this and I'll get you my link." |

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|   | <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Identify the one that makes the most sense for the situation: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Long Term Deals</li> <li>• 1-on-1 Coaching With Me</li> </ul> </li> <li>2. Use the Touchpoints For Upselling</li> </ol> |
|  | Case-specific.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

I have a preference for selling More Access but I'm flexible. This flexibility helps me because I can make tailored offers. And in my experience people appreciate that.

Once they're in, the game is forming a good relationship. This is the key to churn I had to learn: A coaching business is a relationship business.

Upselling can happen quite often with an Offer Shell. I've noticed that often the main blocker is my lack of attention to detail. It's not hard. You just have to slow down a bit and think "what makes sense for this person?".

EVERY MONDAY

- ☐ 1-on-1 checkins
- ☐ LTD in DMs

The 2-Step Plan

The goal of the Shell is NOT to upsell everyone. This is unrealistic and will disappoint you. The goal is to extract as much as you can out of everyone willing to pay.

The other day someone bought a Temporary Access $3k offer. He did not upgrade to Cash Creators.

Under Suite standards, this was a loss. But the guy was, to put it nicely, not Cash Creator material.

Under Shell standards, this was a win because it extracted $3k out of someone I don't enjoy working with.

Everyone has a maximum amount they're willing to pay you. This number is unknown to you and to them. But there are two easy rules to find out that I live by and probably won't stop living by for a long time:

1. Make a Front End offer every day.
2. Make a Back End offer every week.

These give me clarity and make sure I'm doing the main thing: making offers.

All (current) Offer Templates: 📄 Offer Shell Templates .

Implementation

1. Find the offers that are most useful to you at your stage.
2. Make a Front End offer every day (or as often as you can without burning out).
3. Make a Back End offer every week.